THE REZONING PROCESS

What is a rezoning?

A rezoning permanently changes the zoning classification of a property, usually at the request of the property owner. The process requires an application, a fee, and two public hearings. After receiving the application, the City staff notifies adjacent property owners and the Planning and Zoning Commission conducts a hearing. At the meeting, the Commission will vote on a formal recommendation that is forwarded to the City Council. The Council will vote on an ordinance changing the zoning. You will be notified of each of these hearings.

What is the reply form?

As part of the rezoning process, notification letters and reply forms are sent to property owners who own property within 200-feet of the proposed rezoning. Property owners may return their reply forms marked "In Favor", "Opposed" or "Undecided". The reply forms give the Planning and Zoning Commission the opportunity to review the opinions and comments of surrounding property owners. The Planning and Zoning Commission is under no obligation to make their rezoning recommendation based solely on public responses. Therefore, it is important to state any specific concerns on the comments section of the reply form. If owners of more than 20 percent of the property within 200-feet of the proposed rezoning object in writing, a vote of three-quarters of the City Council will be required to approve the zoning change.

Who can attend the Planning and Zoning Commission Meeting?

All citizens that have an interest in the proposed rezoning are encouraged to attend the public hearing.

Does the rezoning obligate the property owner to develop a specific project?

If approved, a rezoning permanently changes the zoning on a property. Except for the PUD (Planned Unit Development) district, the applicant is not obligated to construct a specific use or project. The property owner could construct or establish any of the permitted uses listed in the district regulations. Those uses shown as conditional uses would require an additional notification and approval by the Planning and Zoning Commission.
